The makers of Lambent Fuse, an emerging Minnesota independent film, are offering a chance to feature artists' music in one of their latest trailers. The character trailer explores the world of Allison Swanson, one of the main characters in the story. The trailer works to give the public a better understanding of the complex narrative that is Lambent Fuse. The creators are focused on tapping into the Twin Cities art community in which they live.

“This is a fantastic opportunity for exposure for new, up & coming, or established artists that want to work with fellow artists in the independent film world” said Matt Cici, director of Lambent Fuse. The story is propelled by a character-driven plot composed of intertwining events which play out in a nonlinear fashion. The film has obtained established Minnesota actors in Matthew Feeney, Emily Fradenburgh, and Daniel Sjerven, among others. Already attracting nearly 300 fans on Facebook, and over 1,000 views on trailers alone in one of the largest art communities in the nation, the Lambent Fuse project is a wonderful opportunity for musicians to gain another medium of exposure, of which the filmmakers are excited to share.

Two songs will be showcased during a crucial scene that centers around Allison Swanson as she exposes her condition of kleptomania. To participate, artists are encouraged to send the filmmakers their songs, or links to them on the web to info@lambentfuse.com. Selected artist(s) will also receive a copy of the trailer before the February 16th, 2010 release date. The contest ends February 9th, 2010 at 11:59 PM CST.

Stolen Arrow Films is an independent film production company based out of the Twin Cities. It was founded by the co-writers of Lambent Fuse, Matt Cici and David Marketon, and focuses on creating innovative films with an indie feel.
